

Different countries, same food

Answers

1.

These foods probably originate from overseas and so it is easier to use the original name rather than create a new Indonesian name. It might also encourage people to want to try the food if they are interested in eating food from different countries. In Indonesia, Western food is very popular so having a few western dishes on a menu would be good for business.

2.

I would receive a delicious and refreshing drink made from lemon or lime juice mixed with water, ice and lots of sugar.

3.

The majority of Indonesians, Malaysians, and a large portion of Singaporeans are of the Malay ethnicity. Therefore, they speak very similar languages and share many customs and traditions. That is why foods such as sate and rendang and many others can be found throughout this region of Southeast Asia.

4.

We can find these foods here because many people from these countries have migrated to Australia and have brought their food and other aspects of their cultures with them.